Charles Dickens Biographical Sketch

Charles Dickens, born February 7, 1812, was an English writer and social critic. He created some of the world's most well-known fictional characters and is generally regarded as one of, if not the greatest, novelist of the Victorian Period. His work was, and continues to be, highly popular. Many aspects of his stories and his characters have become embedded in our culture and continue to influence society to this day. He died on June 9, 1870.

Scope and Content Note

The Charles Dickens Collection consists of material relating to the life and work of Dickens, such as original journal reviews and essays by critics and scholars, ephemera, portraits, and other types of items of this nature. Due to the numerous titles of serials represented in the collection, a list of titles organized in alphabetical order by country has been included to aid research. The vast majority of the serial publications in this collection were published in London.

A related collection held by the Maxwell Library is the Charles Dickens Rare Book Collection. This collection consists solely of books and pamphlets by, about, or relating to Charles Dickens and the London of his era. The collection contains over 700 individually cataloged items and can be searched by using the Maxwell Library's online catalog. The majority of first editions of Dickens' novels in both serial and book form are held in this collection, and a list of these can be found at the end of this finding aid.
